Soybeans continue to spotlight the farm scene in so-for as row crops are concerned. The outlook is quite good.

Appomattox farmers should give a high priority to planting soybeans after small grain.

A couple of weeks ago I was with one of my counterparts from Illinois. We were discussing stubble planted soybeans. He said, "We figure it takes 40 minutes to plant and harvest an acre of beans behind small grain." I argured that this must be wrong, but asked how many planters they were using. This, of course, was the secret. They were using a 10 row planter and harvesting with two self-propelled combines.

* * *

Speaking of soybeans, have you seen the roasted soybeans on the grocery shelf. They are packaged in cans like peanuts.

* * *

There are a number of new tomato varieties coming out each year. I find that it's difficult to determine which is the best.

One seedsman sent a few pots of a new variety called Early Girl. They are said to be ready for harvest in 45 days after transplanting and average 7 ounces. They will be interesting to watch.

* * *

According to the latest Crop Reporting Service estimate we have about 2600 hogs and pigs in Appomattox County. This is up from the 1400 reported in 1966.

* * *

Some farmers are asking about the affects of no-til corn that is grown continously and in rotation with other crops.

Seven years of research conducted by V.P.I. shows: Crop rotation was found to be unimportant in determining the yield of no-tillage corn. Neither the length of the rotation nor the crops with which corn was alternated affected the yield. Thus, the no-tillage method makes possible the most intensive corn production that can be realized. The mulch cover apparently protects the soil enough to preserve the necessary soil aggregation and tilth. Conventionally tilled corn, on the other hand, benefited when rotated with other crops.

Double cropped corn yields (planted in stubble of small grain after harvest) averaged 51% of corn planted at normal dates in the spring.

Yields of small grain crops that followed no-tillage corn were slightly lower than those that followed conventionally tilled corn, although the differences were not statistically significant.

Grass and clover hay yields were not different whether they were in rotation with no-tillage corn or in rotation with conventionally tilled corn.

* * *

For cutworm control in newly set vegetable plants mix 2 teaspoons of 25% EC Diagnon (Spectrocide) in one gallon of water. One cup of this mix per transplant should control cutworms.

Camp Will Benefit Area Youth

Water skiing enthusiasts who attend YMCA Camp Rockichi this year will find the camp's facilities vastly enlarged and improved.

Camp Rockichi is the YMCA Camp that serves boys and girls 6-15 in this area.

Because the camp is located on a 55,000 acre lake, aquatic activities always have been emphasized and water skiing has become the major attraction.

An adjustable ski jump can be raised one, two, or three feet above the water surface is under construction, and permission has been granted by the U. S. Corps of Engineers, which operates Buggs' Island Lake, to extend the slalom course from 20 to 40 buoys.

All of the camp's motor boats have been equipped with new motors and two-way radios.

"We have so many campers asking me that the boat operators are instructed to radio in for clearance from the aquatic director," says camp director Carl Manfield. He adds that safety is stressed constantly in the water program.

In addition to new boat motors, the camp now has a $3,000 inventory of water skis, saucers, and ski sleds.

A ski trip planned for August along the inland waterway from Norfolk to Myrtle Beach, S.C., should offer a grand finish to a summer of skiing for junior high young people.

The group, limited to the first 15 who apply, will ski the entire trip using charts and maps furnished by the Corps of Engineers.

A truck traveling on U.S. 17, which parallels the inland waterway, will accompany the skiers and maintain constant contact.

Information about Rockichi or the skiing available at the YMCA.
